A meeting this week about the re-conceptualization of a company website came to a screaming halt when someone on the team dropped Tom's book onto the table with the accompanying exclamation "Mobile first!". The meeting recommenced along this line as we acknowledged that 40% of the site traffic was coming from mobile devices and was trending to be over half by mid-year. The table of contents of Mobile Magic served as the agenda for the rest of the meeting. The book is useful, practical, easy to navigate, and above all enlightened about the possibilities of going mobile as the staging point for communications. This is not a book for the nightstand but rather one to carry with you into every meeting about communications and marketing.

Like most small business owners today, I know that I need to get my business onto mobile devices.

Mobile Magic was recommended to me by a friend, who is also business owner. The book presents a very practical, down-to-earth approach to the design and technical aspects. It got my juices flowing and inspired a total rethink of my web and social strategy. Not only am I saving time and money, I'm certain that the time and money I'm putting into my new strategy are well placed. Mobile Magic is worth your time and money.. Highly Recommend

Tom gave a talk at the Mobile Marketing Association's recent forum in NYC and shared some cases where he and his team created campaigns utilize Social and Mobile media. I found Tom's message to be spot on where any campaign should first focus on the idea, not the technology. Although we all agree that Mobile and Social media are great technologies, they are not the driving force for campaign creation, but ideas are. In his shared case on Nike SB campaign where end users were so engaged the campaign essentially ran on UGC but received tremendous engagement and built brand and connection that brand yearns to create with consumers. I got Tom's book and will read it through as the cases he shared prompt me to believe the book will give me a lot more ideas.
